Reagan Bars Soviet Role As 'Co-Trustee' in Gulf

By Gerald M. Boyd New York Times Service

VENICE - President Ronald teagan said Thursday that the Soviet Union has a stake in "peaceful shipping" in the Gulf, but he rejected suggestions that it serve with the United States as a co-trustee of peace in the region.

At a news conference that followed a seven-nation economic summit, Mr. Reagan said that he had assured leaders that the United States was not in the region "to provoke some kind of increased hostility."

"We're there to deter that very thing," Mr. Reagan said.
The president also spoke in highly optimistic tones about Soviet-

U.S. relations, saying that the conference has resulted in "increased opportunity" for a summit meeting with the Soviet leader, Mikhail S. Gorbachev. He declined to predict when the two leaders might meet,

- The news conference in the gar-den of the Hotel Cipriani focused on the outcome of the economic summit conference that ended Wednesday and the Iran-contra affair back home.

The president, who was pep-pered with questions about the Iran-contra affair, once again de-nied that he had solicited funds to aid the Nicaraguan rebels at a time of a congressional prohibition. On other issues, Mr. Reagan also denied reports that in private discussions with West Germany's chancellor, Helmut Kohl, he had rejected a personal appeal from

Thatcher Wins A 3d Victory, But Majority Is Reduced

By Howell Raines New York Times Service

LONDON - Margaret Thatcher's attempt to become the first British prime minister in this century to win three consecutive terms produced a heavy vote in Britain's general election Thursday, and the initial exit polls projected her as the likely winner, although with a reduced majority in Parliament.

Computer forecasts by the BBC and the Independent Television Network varied widely on the size of the majority predicted for Mrs. Thatcher's Conservative Party. The ITN poll, by Harris Re-search, projected a Conservative majority of 68 seats in the House of Commons, based on interviews with 20,000 voters.

Gailup interviewed 4,500 voters for the BBC, and their projections gave Mrs. Thatcher a much slim-mer majority of 26 seats.

The prime minister went into the election with a 134-seat majority. having called an election 13 months earlier than required by law to take advantage of a growing economy and the boost in popularity she received after her trip to Moscow in

But she ran into fierce opposition from Neil Kinnock, who was able to boost Labor into unexpectedly strong contention by curbing the party's internal squabbling and engineering its first modern television campaign.

The final count from the United Kingdom's 650 parliamentary constituencies was not expected until early Friday morning.

According to ITN, the Conservatives are projected to win 359 seats. Labor 243, the centrist Alliance parties 24 and others 24 seats. The BBC forecast 338 seats for the Conservatives, 261 for Labor and 26 for the Social Democrats.

Both sets of figures would represent significant gains for Labor, which has 206 seats, that would cement Mr. Kinnock's leadership of the fractious party. The Alliance with 27 seats would find the projected results represents a setback for the Alliance's hopes of replacing Labor as the main opposition

Reagan Ends Plan to Arm Saudi Arabia

By David B. Ottaway Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration, facing certain defeat in Congress, withdrew on Thursday a proposal to sell 1,600 sophisticated Maverick anti-tank míssiles to Saudi Arabia. The administration notified

Congress of its decision not to pursue the $360 million sale of the airto-ground missiles in a letter to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, just before the panel was about to approve a resolution to prohibit Senator Bob Packwood, Republican of Oregon, said Wednesday that he had 67 Senate supporters for the resolution. That was the two-thirds majority necessary to override a potential presidential veto of a disapproval resolution.

Senators opposing the sale in-cluded both liberals and conservatives. Opposition in Congress to the sale had been growing since the proposal was announced in late Saudi behavior on May 17, when Saudi pilots declined to pursue an Iragi plane that had attacked the guided-missile frigate Stark, as well as the kingdom's reported tary assistance to the United States in the Gulf, had become stumbling blocks to approval of the arms sale.

Opponents of the sale also have criticized Saudi Arabia for providing $90 million annually to the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Several lawmakers said Thursday that they were pleased by the administration's action. Senator Jesse Helms, Republican of North Carolina, who opposed the sale, said the White House "acted wisely to the arithmetic that was staring it in the face."

J. Edward Fox, a deputy assistant secretary of state, said in testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that he was not sure if the administration would eventually renew the proposed sale.

He said such a step would only be taken after appropriate notification of Congress.

The administration contends that the Saudis need the missiles to protect against possible attacks, primarily from Iran.

Opponents say the missiles, which would be mounted on U.S.made F-5 fighter jets owned by the Saudis, are more weaponry than the Saudis need and could threaten Israel. They also contend that the main Iranian threat to Saudi Ara-than 30 persons were killed Thursday in renewed ethnic violence in Sri Lanka's north and east, less than a week after the army completed a campaign against Tamil guerrilla strongholds on the Jaffna

The attacks came on a Buddhist holy day and a national holiday. President President Junius R. Jayawardene had gone to the an-cient capital of Anuradhapura to pray for peace.

Three soldiers and at least 10 young Tamil men died Thursday morning near Point Pedro. on the coast of the Jaffna peninsula, when a convoy of army buses hit a land mine on a road the military said it had just recaptured. More than 20 persons were wounded.

The young Tamils who died were being returned to their homes by the army after having been detained for questioning.

A Sri Lankan with close ties to the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam, the strongest of the militant groups seeking an independent state for ethnic Tamils, described the incident as an accident. In eastern Sri Lanka on Thurs-

India to Study Citizens' Swiss Accounts

NEW DELHI (Reuters) - Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's government, under heavy pressure to investigate kickbacks in arms deals, said Thursday that it would send a high-level team to Switzerland to discus-

The announcement came a week after Sweden told India that considerable amounts had been paid in connection with a $1.3 billion arms sale to India by a Swedish company. India denied that middlemen were involved or that any commissions were paid.

For weeks, Indian newspapers have published reports of alleged kickbacks and accused the government of showing no inclination to investigate the allegations. Indian opposition parties have used the reports to launch an attack on Mr. Gandhi, whose party is fighting a crucial election next week in Haryana.

U.S. Sends Helicopters to Philippines

MANILA (UPI) — The United States delivered 10 refurbished helicopters to the Philippines on Thursday. Philip Kaplan, the U.S. charge d'affaires in Manila, said the helicopters, which were used during the Vietnam War, would increase troop mobility.

Vietnam War, would increase troop mobility.

Philippine rebel spokesmen in Washington said that the Reagan administration was pressuring President Corazon C. Aquino to mount a total war against the Communist guerrillas.

The refurbished helicopters are part of a $900-million, five-year package of compensation to the Philippines provided by the United States in return for use of bases in the Philippines.

China Angered by Japanese Remark

BELIING (NYT) - The Chinese Foreign Ministry has lashed out at Japan in response to an off-the-record comment reportedly made by a Japanese official who was critical of Deng Xiaoping, China's top leader. The comment apparently was made last week in Tokyo during a background discussion between a Japanese Foreign Ministry official and Japanese reporters. The official is said to have commented that Mr. Deng was "living in the clouds" and that he was "divorced from reality."

Japanese officials "have made most unfriendly remarks on more than one occasion, which will have no good effects on Sino-Japanese relations," said Li Jinhua, a spokeswoman for the Cinese Foreign Ministry on

U.S. Air Controllers to Form Union

WASHINGTON (AP) - U.S. air traffic controllers voted overwhelmingly to form a new union, the Federal Labor Relations Authority announced. The vote was cast six years after President Ronald Reagan A majority was required for certification. The controllers cast ballots in favor of a union by more than a 2-1 margin. With 84 percent of the eligible controllers casting ballots, the National Air Traffic Controllers Association was approved as the controllers' bargaining agent.

The controllers have been without a union since 1981 when leaders of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization attempted to gain more pay and better working conditions by calling an illegal strike.

British customs officers went on strike at four ports Thursday to press demands for higher pay. Freight traffic was delayed as about 200 men walked out at Dover, Ramsgate, Poole and Hull. (Reuters)

Generation 3 and beyond.

The A 320 Airbus represents more than a generational leap forward in advanced flight technologies.

It symbolizes an important new way of thinking about how aerospace programs can be managed, today and in the future.

Partnership is the key. Four major European companies helped build the A 320.

A worldwide network of secondtier partners made vital technological contributions to the program.

A320 will be powered by GE/Snecma and International Aero Engines, both cooperative ventures. And a significant percentage of the A 320 is made in the USA.

As prime technology architect for A 320's advanced cockpit and fly-by-wire concept, our unique store of experience at making partnership programs work has helped make Generation 3 a reality. Now, with your help, we'd like to go beyond. And make Generation 4 a reality, too.

Welcome, Mr. President

We are grateful that you are visiting Berlin, the City in the heart of Germany. Berlin is a symbol of freedom, the vigorous manifestation of Western solidarity uniting our nations.

Berlin is celebrating its 750th birthday. This is a day of rejoicing, a red-letter day, a day to be proud. This is also a day in the shadow of the inhumane Wall. The people of Berlin gratefully remember the airlift. No German has forgotten the resoluteness of the United States of America in saving the City from being seized by the throat. United we stand, devided we fall.

We welcome you to Berlin. Good luck, Mr. President. May God bless you and your country.

Europeans See a Weaker Reagan

Suddenly, Allies Question His Energy and Initiative

mais say that President Ronald Reagan's performance at the 13th economic summit meeting left other leaders of major industrial democracies convinced he has rather suddenly begun to show his age and lame-duck status, and wondering whether he possesses the energy and initia-tive to provide active leadership for the alliance.

This image of Mr. Reagan was reinforced in public Wednesday as the president appeared to he falling asleep during the reading of the final summit communiqué. Treasury Secretary James A. Baker 3d and Secretary of State George P. Shultz seemed to nudge Mr. Reagan to keep him awake. The president's spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, said, "He staved awake for the whole parts."

Mr. Reagan was also the only leader who spoke from prepared note cards in private meetings. Although Mr. Reagan (requently uses such cards, the technique seemed this time to add to the impression that his leadership role had diminished.

On complex issues such as the NATO doctrine of "flexible response" and the impact of eliminating medium-range missiles from Europe, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain and President François Mitterrand of France took the lead at the opening dinner discussion.

The European diplomats said after the summit meeting closed Wednesday that they were struck by the change in Mr. Reagan's demeanor from a year ago in Tokyo, when he was at the zenith of his popularity at home and played a leading role in discusons at the summit meeting ta-

But in private sessions, he was sharply challenged by the leaders of France. West Germany and Japan, who criticized the enormous hudget deficits of the Reagan years, despite Mr. Reagan's claim that he has made progress in reducing them.

Mr. Reagan's partners also expressed anxiety about the effect on allied defense strategy in Europe of a prospective agreement on limiting medium-range nuclear missiles. They also gave only lukewarm backing to Mr. Reagan's initiative for a greater allied naval presence in the Gulf. White House officials privateacknowledged the summit meeting was not a high point for the president. "That's just the

They noted that Mr. Shultz

Mr. Reagan failed to meet even the modest expectations raised for the Venice meeting. For example, before the summit meeting. Mr. Reagan said he would propose that the seven participating nations set a goal of eliminating agricultural subsidies by the year 2000. The worshipers there are "traditionalists" who reject Vatican reforms and insist on a Latin Mass. Politically, they are considered the hard core of the far-right, anti-immigrant National Front, headed by Jean-Marie Le Pen.

Of the 1,500 people that the priest, Christian Laffargue, claims for his flock, he says about one third are under age 30.

Cardinal Decourtray has a record of appealing for tolerance for France's foreign community and for criticizing strengthened controls on immigrants. Critics have dubbed him "the bishop of the

The power and support of the National Front is a phenomenon that many provincial politicians believe the government in Paris does not fully appreciate. For a former defense minister, Charles Hernu, this is the fault of "Parisianism that hides the realities of la France profonde" - literally, deep

Apart from opposition to immigration, the National Front is known for nationalism, a strong law and order program and support for traditional family values, its enemies accuse it of racism and nostalgia for the days of the Vichy collaborationist government of World War II.

National Front sympathizers counter by pointing to the war re-cords of several of its leaders. They are also careful to make a distinction between themselves and neo-

The attitude that the main conservative party, Prime Minister Jacques Chirac's Gaullist Rally for the Republic, should adopt toward the National Front became a major issue last month, just a year before the next presidential elections. Michel Noir, the foreign trade minister, wrote in Le Monde that he preferred electoral defeat to compromise with the ideas of Mr. Le Pen, a criticism of tough public stands on immigration made by other ministers.

Their appearance on May 9, two days before the opening of the trial of Klaus Barbie for his World War II role as an SS officer in the city, was one of the examples cited by Mr. Noir to demonstrate that extremism was gaining ground.

Mr. Hernu said that National Front support tended to be strongest — 17 percent in Villeurbanne compared with a national average of around 10 percent - in areas where French families and immi-

The Seven and the Gulf

The summit meeting in Venice is being described as a disappointment for the United States, which wanted a more demonstrative endorsement of its Gulf policy. But leave aside that it was imprudent for the administration to publicize its hopes in this matter in advance. It was even less prudent not to anticipate that the allies would be sobered by the stunning secret turn that American policy toward Iran and terrorism had taken during the last few years. For the allies now to embrace Mr. Reagan's policies as though he had not raised the deepest doubts about his credibility was never in the cards. Bungles have a cost.

But what about the allies? Are they as detached as depicted in some quarters? The issue is relevant to the effectiveness of American policy and to the support for it likely to come from Congress, which tends to view allied cooperation as the standard by which it should measure out its own support for the Reagan initiative. The evidence available at Venice was not cheering.

But the evidence available in the Gulf is different. The United States is not alone there, as the more alarmist congressional sentiment suggests. The British and French have warships there. The U.S. government, to keep itself from looking isolated and reactive, exaggerates the extent of allied cooperation. But some in Congress, putting a strategic gloss on jitters, minimize it.

Besides, the Russians are now in the Guif. This cuts several ways. The Soviet Navy has made a historic leap into a region from which it has been the Western strategic purpose for a century or more to exclude a Russian presence. This leap created an absolute requirement for any would-be great power to offset the new Soviet presence - not to be careless, but to act. Instinctively and intellectually, the allies understood this large requirement; that is why, nervous as they may be about Mr. Reagan, they accept his "reflagging" of Kuwaiti ships. Some in Congress have not vet understood, and focus less on the rationale than on the risks.

Not out of any love for America, but in pursuit of its own interests, the Kremlin, in moving its fleet into the Gulf, is reinforcing goals held by the West: free navigation. containment of Iran, a negotiated end to the war. The administration is unaccustomed to finding itself with even so scanty and partial a convergence of interests with Moscow as this. But the tactical uses of this convergence are there to be applied. It makes the U.S. intervention marginally safer, and gives Russians and Americans incentive to see the other succeed. The administration, which needs to build international and domestic support for a sound policy,

Quiet Progress on Terror

A major move against international terrorism lies buried deep in the sonorous Venice declaration. The leaders of the seven industrial powers pledged to impose aviation sanctions when a country refuses to extradite or punish hijackers. If the leaders mean what they quietly promise, commercial air flights to offending states should cease "immediately."

That is a lawful weapon with a cutting edge. Unsheathing it helps atone for the failure at Venice to renew last year's call for banning arms sales to states supporting terrorism. Washington violated that policy with its arms sales to Iran, which must explain why Secretary of State George Shultz chooses to shrug off the missing renewal.

Iran flagrantly scores civil aviation treaties adopted at The Hague and Montreal, which call for a total embargo of countries sheltering hijackers. Tehran has not extradited or punished those who hijacked a Kuwaiti airliner to Iran, where two Americans were killed in December 1984. Yet the same mullahs piously invoke international law in protesting the arrest in Britain of an Iranian diplomat charged with shoplifting. High time to enforce international aviation treaties and suspend all flights by European and Japanese carriers to Iran.

The embargo weapon works. At their Bonn meeting in 1978, the seven also adopted a tough statement on aviation sanctions. They then privately threatened enforcement unless Libya ceased sheltering hijackers. At least for a while, Libva stopped, But Europeans have been rejuctant to put lucrative air routes at risk, and allied solidarity vanished last year when the Reagan administration pleaded for air sanctions just before its strike at Tripoli.

An air embargo is easy to impose. It is a widely endorsed penalty that fits the crime. The Venice seven can now show that they mean business by using it.

Sullivan Stood Alone

Most black leaders in South Africa have long viewed foreign business presence, no matter how well intended, as tacit support for the ruling white elite. Now they are joined by the Reverend Leon Sullivan, who had worked for years to fight apartheid through business activism. Last week he called for an economic embargo of South Africa.

Mr. Sullivan is probably right to conclude that American business can no longer serve as a catalyst for peaceful change in South Africa. But the fault rests with the Reagan administration, not the business community. The Reagan policy of the big wink toward apartheid, which it called "constructive engagement," has tainted and undermined enlightened corporate efforts.

The Sullivan Principles were drawn up in 1977 by Mr. Sullivan, a black Philadelphia clergyman who serves as a director of General Motors. They call on American employers to provide desegregated work facilities, equal pay and opportunity for advancement. Amendments in 1984 ask for more, including and a policy that subordinated anti-racism civil disobedience in support of the antiapartheid movement in South Africa.

A few companies bravely answered this call to activism. They built houses for nonwhites in restricted areas, funded antiapartheid organizations and encouraged individual protest against the segregation laws. Many others did only the minimum to stay in compliance. But even the lukewarm supporters helped undermine apartheid by paying white wages to blacks, recognizing black trade unions and employing some nonwhites as supervisors.

U.S. corporations could hardly be expected to bring down the system on their own. They never accounted for more than a few percent of South Africa's gross national product and never supplied critical products. The largely symbolic impact of the Sullivan signatories was undermined by contrary messages from the Reagan administration.

White South Africans want to believe that most Americans support their regime as a bulwark of Western values, and that only a liberal fringe protests against apartheid. President Reagan has fed this fantasy with unreal remarks about racial progress to anti-communism. With an ally like constructive engagement, the Sullivan approach stood vulnerable and alone.

Other Comment

The Venice summit, if only because expectations were so muted, appears to have made useful, modest progress in the economic as well as the political arena. The seven leading industrialized nations are slowly moving in the commendable direction of increased international coordination of policies, whether intervening on the foreign exchange markets to cushion the fall of the dollar or lining up behind the United Nations for a cease-fire in the Gulf.

[But] the initiatives don't add up to a concerted policy to avert a slowdown in world growth and do very little to mitigate the ominous problems of the U.S. economy. And this is a slowdown starting from more than 30 million unemployed.

- The Guardian (London).

On the insistence of the French, the participating countries reaffirmed their stillunmet goal of earmarking 0.7 percent of gross national product for development aid. Also among the positive results at Venice were the calls for "significant" increases in IMF long-term loans at very low interest rates to the poorest countries, coupled with provisions to stretch out repayment. But all this in no way resolves the problem of indebtedness. The poorest countries, with few exceptions, have never been able to bor-

The Seven saw no need to confront the real problem, that of the big Latin American countries' indebtedness to banks. India Bullies a Neighbor

There are signs that the Indian government is trying to damp down its overheated relationship with Sri Lanka following last week's "relief raid" over Jaffna. This should not allow it to escape international condemnation. For India to infringe Sri Lanka's airspace was to bully its tiny neighbor. How far Sri Lanka's Tamils needed supplies is open to debate. That, however, is almost beside the point. If Delhi wished somehow to help them, it could have done so more effectively by working with the Colombo government, not against it. Sri Lanka needs help against the unscrupulous enemy within. If Delhi uses that situation to make political capital it is falling far short of what any country might expect from a more powerful friend and neighbor.

OPINION

Gipper the Gondolier

Venice Was a Bust; Now Here's What Must Be Done

N EW YORK — True to expectations, there was no progress at the Veruce summit meeting. Despite an intellectual consensus on the grave dangers of standing still, and even on solutions, nothing happened. This means the government-to-government negotiating process has broken down, and at the worst possible time.

The untenable imbalances on trade, payments and debt are finally beginning to take their toll. World growth is slowing ominously, and there is talk of a global recession. The steps that would avert it cannot wait two years until a new American president is installed and ready to lead. There is no alternative but to switch international economic negotiations onto an entirely new track.

At other crucial moments in modern history. enlightened leaders have turned to special envoys to break such stalemates. Franklin Roosevelt used Harry Hopkins and Averell Harriman on supersensitive war-planning matters, Richard Nixon had Henry Kissinger on China and President Reagan turned to Alan Greenspan on Social Security.

In the same spirit, and with the same sense of urgency, leaders in Washington, Tokyo and Bonn should now call in new negotiators.

True, the two summit meetings preceding the one in Venice were also do-nothing affairs. There, to excuse inaction, the leaders pointed to continued growth. But that does not wash anymore. The United States and Jupan have slowed to a crawl, the West German economy contracted last quarter and the Third World is sliding into economic chaos.

This disappearing growth and the extreme trends in international debt suggest that we are headed for real trouble. The United States continues to run annual balance-of-payments deficits of about $150 By Roger Altman billion, raising its external debt to $240 billion, the world's largest. Total debt of the five largest developing nations also is growing unchecked and stands at $320 billion. Worse, credit flows to these debtors are beginning to weaken. Foreign capital is pulling back from financing U.S. budget deficits just as American banks and others are cutting off new credit to the developing world.

America and other chronic borrowers are careen-ing toward the type of debt-driven adjustment that hit Mexico. Like any debtor, the United States and the developing world must service their external debt. But with less foreign credit it must increasingly be serviced from earnings, not new borrowing.

In international trade terms, earnings mean trade surpluses. But the only route to surpluses is to decrease consumption and imports and step up investment and exports. Diminished consumption is another term for the bitter experience of lowering one's standard of living. Americans would not be the only ones hurt. The economies that have been living off exports, including Japan's and West Germany's, would drop as their foreign markets dry up. Taken together, this would mean global recession.

The time for study has passed. Here are live elements of a solution: · Washington must move on its budget deficits. thereby slowing its debt accumulation, lowering real interest rates and spurring investment.

· Japan, sitting on the world's biggest capital surpluses, must become financier to the developing world. It should pour capital into the World Bank and other multinational development agencies and sharply increase bilateral aid. West Germany should make proportionate commitments. • West Germany and Japan must undertake larger domestic-stimulus programs to promote imports. This would prod growth in the United States, the rest of Europe and Latin America. Washington and Tokyo should lead a new and tougher fight against protectionism. Self-defeating moves like semiconductor dumping and the Gephardt trade amendment would be stopped. Washington, Bonn and Tokyo should commit themselves to a more stable international monetary regime. The recent coordination on currency reference zones would be institutionalized. The new negotiators would not need huge staffs and elaborate conferences. Harry Hopkins often negotiated alone with Churchill and Stalin, and the Greenspan group negotiated a Social Security package in two weeks. They would, however, need full backing of their heads of state and legislatures. To provide it, Mr. Reagan and the congressional leadership should join together to select the American representative and a small bipartisan group to advise him. Tokyo and Bonn would do the same. America's man should be Paul Volcker, the country's only real economic leader. These envoys should be given a timetable -two months, say - and promised a fast legislative track on any agreement. It is a tall order. But when the stakes are colossal and the solutions understood, there is room for a historic breakthrough.

The writer, assistant secretary of the U.S. Treasury from 1977 to 1980, is managing director of Shearson Lehman Brothers. He contributed this comment to The New York Times.

A UN Role in Mideast Talks Can Be Tested in Advance

By Allan Gerson

W ASHINGTON — The debate on the risks and benefits of an international Middle East peace conference goes on in Israel and in the Rengan administration despite the setback that its prime advocate. For-

The godfathers of the event, if it takes place, are to be the five permanent members of the UN Security Council - Britain, France, China, the United States and the Soviet Union.

Much of the debate as to whether a conference is a good or bad idea centers on what role these five are to play. Will they reflect the prevailing political climate at the United Nations? If so, it is an ill omen. Or will they stay aloof and allow the parties to deal with one another directly as they wish?

These questions are important, and the waters at the Security Council should be tested in advance, because this conference promises to be very different from the one in 1973 that proponents point to as an example of success. In that earlier Middle East conference everything was agreed upon in advance, largely between the United States and the Soviet Union. At the proposed conference, process

In 1981 Israel was, without reference to provocation or context, regularly being condemned for "aggression." Without basis in fact, it was alleged that Israel was poisoning West Bank schoolchildren. It was accused of violating international human-rights standards, such as the 1949 Geneva Conventions, with which it was essennally, if not enturely, conforming.

However, by 1985, the number of Security Council meetings convened for the purpose of condemnatory resolutions aimed at isolating Israel and delegitimizing its exis-

It is not only the mood at the UN that has changed in the last seven years; so have the public positions of the Soviet Union and China. It is reported, for example, that the Soviet leader, Mikhail Gorbachev, recently informed President Hafez al-Assad of Syria that he wants Syria at the table in a constructive role. But are these ostensible changes real or cosmetic? Will the Soviets play a spoiler role? Will the UN umbrella create an environment conducive to direct negotiations, or will it facilitate ter, Yitzkak Shamir, and what colors different views within the Reagan administration. Is there a way of finding out in advance? A productive, or at least a noncounterproductive, Security Council role is not out of the question. In the past the Security Council set the tone for productive talks under the UN aegis but outside the contines of the United Nations, which has often exacerbated rather than resolved conflict.

In 1948-49, Ralph Bunche, as head of the UN Palestine Commission, mediated talks leading to the armistice between Israel and its Arab neighbors; Brian Urquhart, then undersecretary-general, negotiated the role of UN peacekeeping forces in the area; and recently, Secretary-General Javier Pérez de Cuellar has played a useful role as intermediary in the Falklands, Cyprus and Afghanistan conflicts.

Let the Security Council make clear, if it can, through a consensus statement (a mechanism devised precisely for such a declaration of policy) that the council as a whole and its permanent members support a framework of discussion established by conference participants themselves, not by the mean-spirited resolutions adopted at times by the General Assembly. If the Security Council can do this, would alleviate many fears that the proposed conference will be a setting not for peace but for a continuation of conflict through other means. If it cannot, it would tell us a great deal not only about the prospects for the conference but also about the UN's capability to reverse course and once again be a force for peace.

America can no longer manage it all, but a system for cooperative management has not yet been achieved. Something similar is going on in international political affairs. The leaders know they have to get together, but nobody is really in charge. nobody is setting a clear course.

No doubt it is better in the circumstances that the leaders of the big: democracies choose to spare each other, at least face to face, than if they were openly quarreling. Perhaps that in itself justifies filling a summit conference with protocol and emptying it of substance.

But that is not enough to move the world on to a coherent approach to real and urgent problems, or to deal wisely with the opportunities and snares presented by new Soviet policies. Nothing bad happened in Venice. except that nothing much happened.

quality about the way the U.S. govern-ment talks to the American people about foreign-policy problems involving life and death issues. It is an old-fashioned, musty quality, as if it came from another period and way of thinking.

Americans, by and large, are trying to deal with each other with more candor - not always succeeding but trying narder than ever before.

Men and women treat each other more honestly, make more effort to ex-plain themselves and understand each other. So do parents and children.

And because of a fatal, contagious disease that can be spread through sexual intercourse, we are learning to talk pub-licly about details of sexuality that just a year or two ago would have been banned from the airwaves or newspapers.

And yet when it comes to international crises of great import we are treated as backward children, incapable of grasping reality or being trusted with it.

Let's begin with two areas of danger where Washington has not exactly been flowing with frankness:

The Gulf. The American public should be told that if U.S. warships remain in the Gulf the Iranians may hit them and the United States will likely wind up in a war with Iran. It may be limited, but it will be war. The Iranians may decide not to attack, but Americans should understand that as long as the ships are there the decision on war or no war will be made in Tehran. The American people should also be told, now, if the government believes that the need to keep the Gulf open for shipping, to prevent an Iranian victory in the war with Iraq and to block Soviet power in the region is important enough to risk war with Iran. If not, the only decent course would

What's a Navy For?

WHATS the U.S. Navy for? To hear VV some members of Congress, which has voted billions upon billions for naval construction, the navy should spend its time in harbor, well away from any violence. Congress, it appears to many, has failed to accept the fact that as a great power the United States has responsibilities that in present circumstances can be met only by the navy.

Congressional fear that the navy's growing role in the Gulf may provoke Iranian attack is one of the factors influencing planning for a reinforced naval presence in the Gulf. That planning is a scrious enough business without interference from congressmen who see votes in wailing "No more Vietnams." — Syndicated columnist Drew Middleton

NEW YORK — There is a peculiar be to withdraw the ships and to cede the Gulf to Soviet strength. To permit the ships to patrol the Gulf and be attacked without planning for retaliation is not a serious choice. It would abdicate re-sponsibility not simply in the Gulf but for American seamen whose lives have been put at risk. For the government not to talk plainly now is an insult to Americans' intelligence. If the decision is to risk war with Iran, only candid forewarning can muster the public support that is absolutely essential to the commitment of U.S. military power.

The Middle East: Here neither Washington, Jerusalem nor the Arabs talk plainly about the proposal for an international conference. Right now it would be a stick, however covered with velvet sr, with which the Soviet Union could beat both Israel and the United States by supporting the PLO and the hard-line Arab states against Israel.

Before talks are held there should be agreement to confront and attack three realities. One is the refusal of most Arab states to deal directly and reasonably with Israel. They wish to drive her into a small ghetto and still have difficulty accepting her permanent existence. The second is that the Israelis, by refusing to recognize the passion of Palestinian nationality, have made it burgeon.

Third, Israel will not receive world sympathy indefinitely if it persists in holding on to all the West Bank. The image of Israel was once a flowering ert; now it is soldiers on patroi in alien streets paved with hate.

There is a solution that prominent Arabs in the Middle East know is logical and historically justified. It is dangerous for them to talk about it.

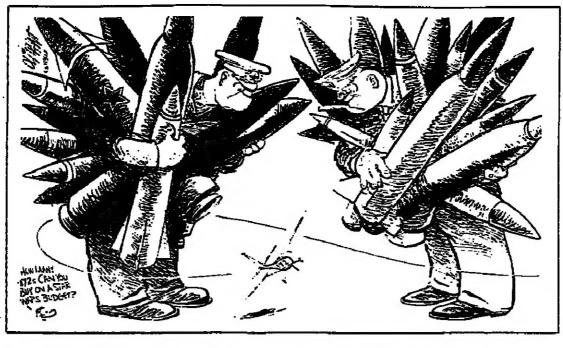

King Hussein of Jordan rules over state that was created by the British in the 1920s for his grandfather, an Arab foreigner, out of territory almost entire-ly Palestinian. Jordan plus a substantial chunk of the West Bank is the Palestine of the future: one state, one population, one government, one homeland.

The king is uncertain of strong support among West Bank Palestinians and shies away from Jordan-Palestine because he fears PLO terror would destroy him.

The PLO hates the idea because eventually it could lead to a strong Jordan-Palestine without it. The Israeli government has become so enmeshed in the West Bank politically and emotionally that it will not now accept the only solution that would remove the burden of occupation and the unceasing threat of unsatisfied Palestinian nationalism.

The Reagan administration, like its edecessors, will leave the truth about Jordan-Palestine to its successor. But on the risk of war with Iran there is not much time left for the president to use the asset of candor. Today or tomorrow would be fine.

AIDS: Calls for a Crash Course and Mandatory Testing

Against AIDS" (March 2):

The major U.S. television networks should present a joint prime-time special on sex education in general and AIDS in particular. This would educate the entire American public about AIDS overnight. It would save lives and, as a valuable side effect, probably reduce the number of unwanted teen-age pregnancies.

RICK BENGE

Regarding the opinion column "This AIDS Debate Needs a Needle of Straight Talk" (June 4) by George Will:

In attacking a British anti-AIDS campaign as a "message designed to absolve bomosexuals and addicts of dispropor-tionate responsibility for the epidemic," Mr. Will attempts to establish culpabil-ity for the disease. He would rather the world point fingers than give a much-needed hand to those unfortunate people — drug addicts and blood donors, homosexuals and heterosexuals — who are suffering from this virus. Transforming this medical tragedy into a judicial inquiry only breeds ignorance, fear and hatred, none of which contributes positively toward halting AIDS.

Regarding the opinion column "AIDS: We Simply Cannot Afford to Wait and See" (May 27) by James G. Glimm, Robert H. Kupperman, Paul Craig Roberts and David H. Sharp:

This is in line with the trend of stockbrokers judging new pharmaceuticals and assistant TV producers pontificating on producers pontificating on violence. If AIDS were left to physicians,

WILLIAM KONIGSBERGER, MD.

Regarding the report "3 Contract AIDS in U.S. By Skin-Blood Contact" (May 21): I was dismayed to see the headline about health workers contracting AIDS through skin-blood contact. After having read the report I am under the im-pression that the three were infected with HTLV-3 virus, that is, they are carriers and are "serum positive" - not suffering from AIDS or even the so-called AIDS-related complex. Headlines such as this will make AIDS paranois (as opposed to realistic confrontation of the dangers and differences between infection with the virus and the disease itself) much worse than it is.

NICOLE M. LeBLANC. Paris.

Ellen Goodman points out in her opinion column, "The Medical Bits and Pieces Don't Add Up" (Meanwhile, May 26) that doctors seem unable to decide whether running alcohol in moderation, caffeine, saccharine, and so forth are good or bad for us. How then, can they be so sure that AIDS cannot be transmitted by casual contact?

THOMAS OLESON. Rome.

Anyone who knows he or she is infected with a deadly, sexually transmitted disease has more than a "moral" duty to al community. Multilingual, widely warn potential partners and, if neces-traveled, possessing immense erudition sary, take all reasonable precautions against passing it on. He or she has an absolute legal duty to do so, failing which, strict criminal and civil sanctions should be applied. There is no difference between a person failing to take these precautions and wounding or killing someone with a deadly weapon. The consequences are more gradual but identical. The only question is degree of guilt - premeditation or negligence. If we do not take strong measures AIDS will continue to spread in geometrical progression. It is not a matter of philosophical choice, but of survival. Education is good, but insufficient, as is voluntary testing. Testing should be mandatory and periodic. Tamper-proof medical evidence should be produced in any situation where AIDS could be transmitted. Fraud or failure to do so should be severely punished. Only by such rigorous methods can we protect ourselves from decimation until a cure is found.

Finding a Happy Hearth in London Can Be a Most Uncivilized Experience

By Sherry Buchanan al Herald Tribune LONDON — Buying residential property in London can be a rathless game - especially in today's

"So, messieurs," said our stony faced interrogator, you claim you are journalists. Harmless Americans on vacation. If in fact you are journalists why are you here, not at the front reporting the invasion?" What invasion?

At daybreak that morning, the inspector informed us, the filthy stinking Bother had launched an allout attack on Holland, Belgium and Luxembourg, the northern gateway to France. What did we say to

For our protection, the inspector went on, he had to warn us that a few hours carlier two young men had been cornered in a nearby village by a mob of enraged farmers wielding hav forks and barely escaped with their lives. The pair were actually French citizens, innocent traveling salesmen from Paris but strangers in the district, like ourselves.

NORTH CAROLINA

American Dance Festival ■ The American Dance Festival at Duke University in Durham, North Carolina, is becoming increasingly interna-tional in its influence. It is helping to found what is to tional in its influence. It is helping to found what is to be the first official modern-dance company in China; Charles Reinhart, the festival's director, was responsible for bringing the first Butoh group to America from Japan in 1982, and for introducing Maguy Marin to the United States in 1983, along with other French companies unknown in the United States. A new aspect of this expanding international activity this year will be the festival's coordination of a 20-day U.S. visit by seven young French choreographers as part of the USIA Youth Exchange Program. The festival also is taking an in-depth view of the Hawaiian hula. Until July 18.

STUTTGART

20th-Century English Art

If you missed the massive survey of 20th-century English art at the Royal Academy of Arts in London earlier this year, you can catch it at the Stuttgart Staatsgalerie. The show includes more than 300 paintings, sculptures and other works, ranging from Vanessa Bell to Francis Bacon and beyond. Some of the other artists in the big retrospective: Stanley Spencer, Gwen John, Edward Burra, Percy Wyndham Lewis, Henry Moore, Ben Nicolson, Anthony Carro, Richard Hamilton and Gilbert & George. The shows runs through Aug. 9.

PARIS

Handel and Mozart

■ Opera seria, the principal operatic genre of the 17th and 18th centuries, is taking over both of the Paris Opera's stages in a trio of new productions in the closing weeks of the season. Handel's "Giulio Cesare" (1724) has its premiere June 20 at the Palais Garnier under the musical direction of Jean-Claude Malgoire, staged by Nicholas Hytner and designed by David Fielding; Valerie Masterson sings Cleopatra and the countertenor Graham Pushee is Caesar. The genre was on its way out when Mozari came along more half a century later, but he turned to it on two important occasions — "Idomeneo" (1781) was his first stage masterpiece and "La Clemenza di Tito". was ins first stage inastrapiece and "Lac Remenza de Into" = (1791) his final opera. They will be performed concurrently at the Salle Favart beginning June 24 ("Idomeneo") and June 29 ("Tito"), both conducted by Christopher. Hogwood and in stagings by Federik Mirdita, with sets and costumes by Rudolf Riescher and Gera Graf. The tenor Thomas Moser sings both title roles and Trudeliese Schmidt, Carol Vaness and Danielle Borst take other principal parts in both works.

NEW YORK

2.000 Years of Keys

Romans devised bronze versions that doubled as seals. In the Middle Ages, iron keys were made with enough heft to fell thieves. By the 18th century, the ultimate in a steel key incorporatred the owner's monogram in the handle, or better yet, in the bit, making it look like a miniature branding iron. These and many more historical nuggets are evoked, with impressive examples, in "Safe and Secure: Keys and Locks," an exhibition at the Cooper-Hewitt Museum, 2 East 91st Street, though Oct. 18. The 500 objects on view range over 2,000 years, from ancient Egypt to the present, and document the evolution of materials, technology and social attitudes that dic-

ZURICH

Delacroix Retrospective

■ A brooding self-portrait of the young painter as Hamlet sets the stage for the huge Delacroix retrospective gathered at the Kunsthaus in Zarich, from the Louvre and museums all over the world. In his grandiloquent scenes for Goethe or Shakespeare, violent battles or fighting animals, exotic people and costumes, Eugène Delacroix was the passionate witness of all the Romantics adored, while his sensual interior scenes and strong color contrasts would later influence the Impressionists. After all this roar and talent, it is restful to enjoy his superb preliminary sketches. Simultaneously, the Zurich museum is showing caricatures, cartoons, sketches and early photographs of Paris and the Romantic poets and painters of the period. After Aug. 23, the exhibition will to Frankfurt

The Making of a Modern Movie Star

by Aljean Harmetz

OS ANGELES — Fifty years ago, a movie star was an actor or actress under contract to Warner Bros. or Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 20th Century-Fox or Paramount, who had the top roles in three or four of the studio's big-budget movies each year, ones that cost $1.5 million and could not be made in less than eight weeks.

In today's fragmented Hollywood, what is a star? No one even agrees on the defini-tion. If it is someone who can force audiences to buy tickets, Robert De Niro is definitely not a star. If it is someone who is paid at least a million dollars, the industry

"Tom Cruise can go into 10 bombs and it won't matter. Bette Midler can be in 18 failures and she's still a star because she lights up the screen," said Jeffrey Katzen-berg, chairman of Walt Disney Pictures, of the two actors who have made the leap to genuine stardom in the last year.

"By stardom, people can mean actors who make over $1 million or actors who guarantee you a certain box-office take or simply actors whose names are familiar," said Laurence Mark, producer and 20th Century-Fox studio executive. His own definition is "someone I am consistently interested in seeing on the screen. Some people are talented but they don't make your eyebrows raise.

James L. Brooks, the writer and director of "Terms of Endearment," said, "It's an emotional connection that's made between the actor and the audience, either an inner quality or extraordinary gifts." Brooks added the statement with which everyone would agree: "We all know it when we see it."

Who will be tomorrow's stars? A dozen top executives and producers were asked to handicap the chances of 17 young ac-tors: Matthew Broderick, Matt Dillon, Emilio Estevez, Steve Guttenberg, C. Thomas Howell, Timothy Hutton, Rob Lowe, Madonna, Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio, Andrew McCarthy, Demi Moore, Judd Nelson, Sean Penn, Elizabeth Perkins, Molly Ringwald, Ally Sheedy and Charlie Sheen. All of them have starred in at least one movie. Most are in the running for the same roles, and indeed several have starred together as a group. There was surprising unanimity among the executives and producers. They were not questioning the talent of any of the actors; only whether they had the spe-cial quality that makes a genuine movie star. To almost everyone, Rob Lowe was star. To almost everyone, Rob Lowe was too pretty. Timothy Hutton too introvert-ed, Sean Penn too self-destructive. Nor did they think that Judd Nelson, Emilio Este-vez, Howell. Ally Sheedy, Matt Dillon or Steve Guttenberg had the special qualities for stardom. On the other hand, Molly Ringwald was intrinsically intriguing, said one. She demands that you watch what she's up to, said another. Ringwald, Charlie Sheen and Madonna were the three who were picked — not quite unanimously - as most likely to become stars.

The executives agreed that some of the shots at stardom would depend on roles offered and choices made. They included and McCarthy.

Even at the height of the studio system,

Hollywood didn't always succeed at turning rakish smiles or handsome profiles into stars. The audience, then as now, could be stubbornly resistant to drinking at the trough of Hollywood hyperbole. Sam Goldwyn finally had to give up on Anna Sten, who was seen as the new Mar-lene Dietrich. M-G-M erred by introducing Deborah Kerr as "Deborah Kerr. rhymes with Star," a mistake that took the English actress eight years and "From Here to Eternity" to overcome.

By and large, however, the formula worked. The first step was to take an attractive young actor and shove him into as many pictures as possible in as short a time as possible. Clark Gable had roles in 28 movies between 1931 and 1935. M-G-M put Mickey Rooney in eight movies in 1938. When audiences balked at an early taste of the pungent Bette Davis, Jack Warner kept flinging her back at them. Today, with no studios looking out for their careers, young actors are lucky to appear in two movies a year.

A promising new actor was paired with his studio's major female stars. In 1932, his first year at Paramount, Cary Grant was cast in seven movies; his co-stars included Mae West, Carole Lombard, Marlene Dietrich and Sylvia Sidney. A new actress was matched with her studio's male stars. The rest was easy. Cradled in a seven-year contract, the star was taught etiquette by the studio, renamed and given a new biography by the studio and dressed by the studio, the roles as carefully customtailored as the clothes, M-G-M kept Rooney as the lovesick high school student Andy Hardy until he was 26. For M-G-M, Lana Turner was the sophisticated girl and June Allyson the girl next door, And Ava Gardner was the love goddess who replaced Rita Hayworth and was in turn replaced by Marilyn Monroe.

Things are different now. The sevenyear contracts have been torn up and the studio fan mail departments have been closed. And it's every man for himself.

T IS 1:30 P.M. and Charlie Sheen is ravenous. Wearing black sweatpants and an old T-shirt belonging to his brother Emilio Estevez, he hunches over the menu at a Los Angeles hamburger joint. He chooses two hamburgers, clam chowder and chicken wings, plaintively asking the waitress - she is aware of who he is and he is aware that she is aware - to "Bring food quick." It is a few days before the opening of the blockbuster Academy Award-winning "Platoon," in which he plays a young college student molded in the crucible of Vietnam.

"Platoon" has made 21-year-old Sheen's name recognizable to audiences and allowed him to raise the asking price for his services to $1 million. But Hollywood was aware of his potential more than a year ago. 'He was only on screen in 'Ferris Bueller' for three minutes and he damn near stole it," said Ned Tanen, president of Paramount's Motion Picture Group. Defining himself as "5-foot-10-inches tall on paper" and "155 pounds soaking wet with a pocketful of change," Sheen has a hulking presence and watchful eyes. The son of Martin Sheen already notices a rustle when he enters a room. Chainsmoking and chewing gum at the same time, he deftly imitates the people who "start whispering to one another" they see him.

What Charlie Sheen is on the verge of becoming, Tom Cruise already is, Cruise became a star when "Top Gun" made 5177 million at the box office last year, and he solidified that by almost holding his own against Paul Newman in "The Color of Money." His voice on the telephone is soft and low. He says "Yes ma'am" and "No ma'am." Nearly everyone has mentioned his politeness, but, from a movie star, it is, nevertheless, a

At 25, his asking price is $4 million a picture. Clark Gable's last M-G-M contract paid $7,200 a week. "I'd much rather make my own decisions," said Cruise. "I like to make my own mistakes. After 'Taps' came out, people saw me as a psy-chotic cadet. I was only offered those roles and I wouldn't take them. I don't have a family to feed, and money isn't the reason I became an actor. I would have held out as long as it would have taken."

What qualities, besides good looks, have propelled Cruise? That guy has the most winning smile of anyone I have seen except Eddie Mur-phy." said Katzenberg, "His smile says, We're going to have fun." Added Elien Chenowitz, a casting director, "He has that killer smile that Nicholson and Redford have."

"I don't worry about whether I'm making the right decision," said Cruise. "I'm one to believe that everything I do is right, that I can make it right." That kind of confidence is part of Chenowitz's recipe. "Actors can't apologize for themselves," she said. "You can't get the impression they feel. I'm not really good. You don't want to see me."

"Everything Tom does consumes him completely," said Simpson, who cast Cruise as a cocky fighter pilot in "Top Gun." "He's a heterosexual Montgomery Clift. To be a teen heartthrob you have to be nonthreatening in your sexuality. To cross over to adult stardom, there has to be an edge. Tom Cruise is dangerous,"

T takes charisma to become a star today, and a greater degree of luck than was necessary when studios gave any pretty ingenue a half-dozen pictures in which to prove herself. Luck and shrewdness. The right picture at the right time. Madonna's range is limited, but she's got a shot at stardom if she's lucky enough to a shot at standard it said to the confind a mainstream version of 'Desperately Seeking Susan,' " said one executive. "Through choices of material, career' happen," said Don Simpson, the co-producer of the two "Beverly Hills Cop" movies. "The gods used to be Louis B. Mayer and Martin Cabo. The gods used to be Louis B. Mayer and Harry Cohn. There are no gods now. There's no studio executive or producer alive today who has the power to make a Good luck isn't enough. Matt Dillon was showcased in "Little Darlings," a surprise box-office success. He followed it with starring roles in "Tex." "The Outsiders" and "The Flamingo Kid." "If he were going to be a star, we'd know it by now, said one of the executives who handi-capped the young actors. "He's had his shots," said another.

They agree that stardom has little to do with acting talent. The handicappers often turned thumbs down by using the word "interchangeable" when referring to some of the actors. While Disney's Katzenberg initially said Cruise is a star because he is talented, he later admitted that what he means by talent is charisma.

To cross over to real stardom can also be dangerous - in an unexpected way. "Actors used to make a living," said Kat-zenberg. "They got a paycheck each week. Now they strike a fortune. It's like diving into the ocean and finding a treasure chest. Bill Murray never has to work again and can live in any lifestyle he chooses for the rest of his life. So he has the weight of What Will Bill Murray Do Next and Will It Succeed?" on his shoulders."

Under such pressure, some stars be-come incapable of decision. Afraid to go back to work, they find themselves off the screen for years at a time. Encrusted with both insecurity and self-importance, few have the carefree recklessness that allows Jack Nicholson to accept small roles, sec-ondary roles, if the characters are interest-

A look at the top box-office stars of the last 54 years is instructive. Each year since 1932 Quigley Publications has polled the nation's theater owners. Between 1932 and 1940. Shirley Temple led the list three times and the Top 10 was evenly divided between actors and actresses. It has been downhill for actresses ever since. Between 1973 and 1976, Barbra Streisand was the only woman to make the list. This change in the status of actresses is at least partly because the core moviegoing audience today is between 12 and 25 years old. Since this audience prefers action-adventure movies and comedies with male stars, there are few good roles for women.

Although the Quigley poll most often reflects the popularity of an actor's movies during a particular year, the list is most interesting in spotlighting the few stars who have endured. Clint Eastwood first made the list in 1968 and has been there every year since. Between 1949 and 1974 John Wayne dropped off the list only once. Bing Crosby was No. 1 from 1944 to 1948 and didn't vanish until 1955.

There are fashions, Jack Nicholson, with his shark's smile and anti-hero ways. was perfect for Watergate and the cynical years that followed. Fox's Mark thinks one component of Cruise's success is "a return by the nation to traditional values."

Two things are certain. Since luck is unpredictable, the handicappers will be wrong in more than one case. And by 1989, there will be a new crop of candidates. One or two will become stars. A few will disappear. The rest will work steadily in television movies or star in films whose success or failure won't depend on them. A few will explode for a year or two and then fade. With "Saturday Night Fever" and "Grease," John Travolta was a bigger star than Tom Cruise. "But," said a movie executive, "the public wasn't interested in seeing him grow up."

The Art of Italian Majolica and English Derby Potters

by Max Wykes-Joyce

ONDON - The basic nature of potter's clay and its kinship to humankind was aptly summarized by an anonymous English country potter's inscription on a chamber pot:

EARTH I AM ET TES MOST TRUE DISDAYNE ME NOT FOR SO ARE YOU

Two London exhibitions show what civilized refinements could be made from that most unpromising of materials at the hands of master potters and master decorators.

At the British Museum, "Ceramic Art of the Italian Renaissance" examines the history and development of majolica — the paintnd tin-glazed pottery that became popular in lualy from the 15th century onward.

So clearly set out and captioned that one may go around the show without the catalogue (though one would be foolish to miss so excellent a work, with its 180 pages of profusely illustrated text and 24 pages of color plates) the show opens with a display of the technique of majolica potting. Clay due from a riverbed is purified, then the jan or dish is made on a potter's wheel or in a plaster mold, and fired. After the first firing, the piece is dipped in the lead glaze and left to dry. The picture is painted on the dry glaze, customarily in six colors — blue, green, yellow, orange, purple and brown, and rarely, with an extra red, from a comparatively uncommon iron-rich clay. When the painting is dry, it is dipped in a clear glaze. and fired a second time.

The exhibition begins with two displays of the forerunners: Italian medieval wares with simple green and manganese decorations, and the Spanish lusterwares made for affluent Italian families.

These Spanish wares, mostly made in Valencia or Malaga, were shipped to Italy from Majorca, and were called by the Italians "maiolica" - which some say represents the medieval Italian word for Majorca, and others say comes from a confusion of the Spanish obra de melica, or "work from Malaga." Whatever its derivation, "maiolica" became the Italian name for all tin-glazed pottery. The first multicolored majolica appeared in north and central Italy in the 1450s, and (story-painted) pottery prevailed all over the north, the painters often choosing pictures from well-known works - a typical set of bowls made for, and bearing the arms of, Francesco Guicciardini and his wife Maria Salviati, is decorated with images from Ovid's "Metamorphoses" as portrayed in the paintings of Luca Signorelli,

Although the chief themes for majolica decoration were adapted from the classics, the Bible or master engravers such as Dürer and Marcantonio, there were two other particular genres: wares that reflected contemporary events, and belle donne, or "pretty lady." pieces. Most interesting among the contemporary portion of the exhibition is a pharmacy bottle potted at Castelli between 1511 and 1520 and decorated in blue, yellow, orange and green, with a bear, the emblem of the Orsini family, hugging an architectural column, the emblem of the Colonna family. backed with the motto "Et. sarrimo boni. amici" (and we shall be good friends). This clearly commemorates the reconciliation in 1511 between the two families, which for hundreds of years had been feuding like the Montagues and the Capulets.

The English painter-decorators of a later period are featured in "Painters and the Derby China Works 1785-1848" at the Victoria and Albert Museum. There has been a porcelain factory in Derby since 1750. The

By this time, specialized majolica centers Royal Crown Derby Porcelain Company, which still exists, has its own museum.

William Bemrose, ceramic historian and 19th-century chairman of the company, collected watercolors and engravings from which were made the decorations on Derby porcelain. His huge two-volume collection has been given to the company museum by Bemrose's American descendants.

The two museums had the happy notion of displaying many of the decorated porcelains alongside the original designs. Derby excelled in floral wares; among the great painters represented are William Billingsley (1758-1872). William Pegg the Quaker (1775-1851), son of a gardener and perhaps the finest of flower painters among porcelain decorators, of whom the Royal Derby Muse-um owns the 1813 sketchbook with its 112. drawings and watercolors: and Pegg the Quaker's star pupil, Joseph Bancroft (1796-1857), a Derby-born child apprentice from the age of 5, of such natural genius that by the age of 10 he was painting master to Lord Scarsdale's children.

The Secrets of Split Stone

by David Galloway

USSELDORF Many viewers of this exhibition mevitably think of dolmens and menhirs — those prehistoric stone monuments that radiate such compelling, enigmatic energy. For all their weighty presence, the sculptures of Ulrich Rückriem seem to hover above the of Ulrich Ruckrieus seem to hover above me museum's brightly polished floor. Split, sawed, chiseled, these gigantic slabs of gran-ite or dolomite have yielded up their inner-most secrets. And the drill-marks are left to testify to man's artful intervention.

Nearly 20 years have passed since the German artist produced his first "split" composition — five slabs of greenish dolomite hammered out of a single rectangular block. Meanwhile, Ulrich Rückriem has won increasing recognition as Germany's leading sculptor. Yet despite shows in Paris, New York and Tokyo, the 49-year-old shaman is little known outside his native country. The transport problems overwhelm most curators. For his masterful installation at the Venice Biennale in 1978, Rückriem worked with a single stone weighing 13 tons.

plicated by the sculptor's preference for producing works for particular outdoor sites or particular rooms. He often vetoes plans to show them in other contexts. Hence, even German art fans often know only isolated pieces — in Hamburg or Bonn, Ulm or Münster. The overview that was missing is now brilliantly composed by five separate exhibitions —in Düsseldorf, where the artist was born; in Mönchengladbach, where he spent much of his childhood; and in Coogne, where he lives for part of the year.

Düsseldorf boasts the most symphonic resentation, with a series of recent works that amply testify to the sculptor's increasing subtlety and refinement. The hall for tempo rary exhibitions at Dösseldorf's new State Museum has the charm (and the proportions) of a submarine repair station. Until now, no artist could compete with this yawning vacancy. Rückriem fills it with a presence that is lycic, tactile and starkly beautiful. As an elegant variation on a theme, he has polished some slabs before returning them to their original place in the raw, segmented block. The unworked elements, with their marks of drill and chisel, hold the gleaming surfaces in check. The danger of salon "pret-tiness" is avoided.

Earlier works and drawings are on view at the Abteiberg Museum in Monchgladbach. Rickriem began his artistic career in the 1960s by bending lengths of iron into mini-malist shapes. He also worked with steel plates, wood and found objects. In every case, his goal was to respect the integrity of his materials - to intervene as little as possible in making his own aesthetic statement. Stone, however, soon became his primary medium, and one to which he could apply his own professional skills.

Following graduation from high school, Rückriem began an apprenticeship as a stonemason. Eventually he would work on Cologne's famous cathedral, where he developed a profound respect for volumes formed over geological cons. Two seemingly identi-cal blocks might reveal radically different interior structures, and the stonecutter's tools had to sense veins and fissures invisible to the eye. The apprentice's respect for such diosyncracies found a new dimension when Rückriem began to work within the quarry from which his stones came. It is now his

While copying damaged statues for the cathedral, Rückriem developed an abiding allergy to representative sculpture (though be later supported himself by carving portrait busts and tombstones). Nonetheless, something of the mystic presence of the sacral place seems to have left its mark. There is an unmistakably religious quality a sense of awe, piety, reverence and transcendental beauty — in his works. It is not hard to think of Ulrich Rückriem as a kind of shaman. And it is a fitting coincidence that the other great shaman of modern German art, the late Joseph Benys, also worked for a time on the cathedral in Cologne. There, in the city of his apprenticeship, Rückriem has erected a field of several gray pillars at the Kunstverein. Unlike the elaborated forms in Düsseldorf, these persuade by their almost penitential severity. At his ware house space in the suburb of Höningen. Rückriem has composed his own "ideal" exhibition, and opened it to the public. The Wilkens and Jacobs Gallery, meanwhile, is showing the artist's multiples - the last, he insists, that he will ever produce. That show, then, provides the finishing touch for Rückriem's bravura Rhineland retrospective.

The Rückriem exhibitions can be viewed at Düsseldorf's Kunstsammlung Nordrhein-Westfalen until Aug. 2, Tuesday through Sunday, 10 A.M. to 6 P.M.; at the Städtisches Museum Abteiberg in Mönchgladbach until Sept. 9, Tuesday through Sun 10 A.M. to 6 P.M.; at the Kunstverein in Cologne until July 7, Tuesday through Sun-day, 10 A.M. to 5 P.M.; at the Halle Rückriem in Cologne-Höningen until July 7 Wednesdays and Saturdays, 11 A.M. to 8 P.M.; and at the Wilkens and Jacob Gallery, Tuesday through Friday, 10 A.M. to 1 P.M. and 3 P.M. to 6 P.M., Saturdays from 10 A.M. to 2 P.M.

OUSTON - The new Menit Collection is a magical museum. It leads the eye to mysterics. It summons many gods.
It does not try to teach as other institutions do. It is not encyclope-dic or in any way pedantic. Its objects come from Africa, Mexico and Moscow, from the bogs of Celtic Ireland, the studios of Manhattan, from Paris and Peru.

The oldest, found in France, is a bit of Ice Age bone incised with trotting reindeer. The newest is a halo, nearly eight feet high, and sheathed in gleaming gold. It was made by James Lee Byars in 1985. They could not differ more, yet

Though the art is shown in groups, in what one might call chapters, one is not asked to read them in any special order. Exploring this collection is like flipping through the pages of Mairaux's ecumenical "Museum Without Walls." Here, as in that volume, the one another as if paying no attention to style or to time. Among the earliest and loveliest works in the collection is a figurine from Turkey, a small rechni male idol, sensuous and plump, made in southwest Anatolia, circa 5600 B.C. Her sisters here include a figurine from Mali, a strange, largeeyed reclining nude by Romania's Victor Brauner from 1946, a seated Plaster woman modeled by George Segal in 1967, and another sort of odalisque that also hints at death, Magritte's reclining coffin, "Ma-dame Récamier" of 1967.

Near that Turkish figure stands another sort of nude, a superb standing figure fashioned in the Cyclades circa 2709-2400 B.C. Her body has been purified, as if wed to numbers. That odd, compelling sense of the sacred made visible through mathematic's magic is sensed throughout the gallery's opening exhibition. One sees it in a figurine, a woman like a cross, that was carved in Cyprus in 3000 B.C., and in a standing cubist nude painted by Picasso in 1909-1910, and in the elongated strangeness of "Standing Woma," (1953), a small printed plaster by Alberto Giaco-

Grids, in this exhibit, begin to sing of crosses. One feels that in the tall, straight lines of Barnett Newman's paintings, in Mondrisn's right angles, in Frank Stella's painted bands of aluminum and copper, and nowhere more mysteriously than in Robert Rauschenberg's early, unfamiliar "Crucifix-ion and Reflection" (1950-51).

Painters seen by some as irreligious formalists here are represented by objects that, like mantras, must have been produced to encourage meditation. One such contemplative object is a small green grid by Jasper Johns of 1953. There are no letters and no numbers in its ittle squares; there is nothing there but paint. It seems a portrait of the

In those days segregation in the South was as firmly established as a law of nature. I found myself in a car packed with soldiers. I moved to a less crowded one, empty but for three or four blacks. A conductor soon told me I could not stay there. I had crossed the color bar."

Twenty-five years ago the Menil Foundation established a research project on "The Image of the Black in Western Art." That project has, so far, has resulted in an archive, in three thick published volumes, and in some of the most poignant works

ARIS — One of themes of Rudolf Nurcyev's directorship of the Paris Opera Ballet has been the enrichment of the 20th-century repertory, not only by the steady introduction of "classics" of the last half-century or so, but by providing a major platform for some of the younger choreographers now on the rise.

It is not that the 20th century is foreign to the common of the steady of the ste

the company; after all, Serge Lifar wrote all his ballets on its corporate body, the creations of Balanchine and Robbins have long been welcome, and it has been 14 years since Merce Cunningham shook some of the dust out of the Palsis Garnier with "Un jour on denx." This season alone has seen a full program of the ballets of Antony Tudor (in what turned out to be the season of his death), and the adding to the repertory of the Balanchine/Stravinsky "Symphony in Three Movements" and "In Memory," Jerome "Robbins's setting of Berg's Violin Concerto.

And the reference here is not to the Groupe de Recherche Chorégraphique (GRCOP), the lively enclave within the company whose business is to occupy itself with modern dance, to experiment and take chances. Rather, it is the perception that the 20th-century vocabulary and the experience of what is understood by "modern dance" and "dance theater" has never seemed so integral to the full company than it is now. This is no mean thing — a ballet troupe's muscles can be stretched pretty far keeping one foot in contact with a three-century-old atradition and the other in the here and now.

The perception has been heightened in recent weeks by the first performances of some substantial new works, notably William Forsythe's "In the Middle, Somewhat Elevated" and Karole Armitage's "Les Anges Teanis" (Tamished Angels), both on the recent program of five pieces by American contracts. can choreographers, and Magny Marin's "Leçons de Ténèbres." All three choreographers have already produced pieces for GRCOP, but these works mark major efforts to utilize the full resources of the company and the stage of the Paris Opera.

French modern dance broke out its ghetto m 1983 when the American Dance Festival introduced five young French troupes to the United States. Magny Marin's own company, based in the Paris suburb of Cretel, was one of them. Since then, her "May B," in-spired by the works of Samuel Beckett using music by Schubert, and her dollhouse setting of Prokofiev's "Cinderella" for the Lyon Opera Ballet, have been such hits in New York that they were brought back a second. time. With her almost baroque series of the-

Didière in "Les Anges Ternis," Guillem and Hilaire in "In the Middle, Somewhat Elevated," and "Leçons de Tenèbres."

The experience of what is understood by "modern dance" and "dance theater" has never seemed so integral to the whole Paris Opera Ballet company as now.

ater as a visual speciacle, supported by a firm sense of structure, she has rapidly become the most visible French choreographer of her generation.

Certain themes recur in Marin's work; the sense of lost innocence or the destruction of an earthly paradise in "Babel Babel" and "Eden," the calamitous effect of social convention on emotional and sexual longings in "Hymen," a feeling, even a kind of nostaigia, for a Spain she did not know, in "Calambre" (Marin was born in Toulouse of parents who had fled Franco Spain).

"Leçons de Tenèbre," her new 40-minute work for the Paris Opera, is not easy to situate. The music is François Couperin's pristine and delicately moving setting of the biblical Lamentations of Jeremiah, bemoaning the fall and martyrdom of Jerusalem, performed by two sopranos and a viola da gamba under the fastidious direction of Wil-liam Christie, who also played the organ.

Montserrat Casanova's set suggested a gloomy temple, illuminated only by a 13-armed candelabra, with the dancers garbed in monkish robes, black for the men and white for the women. But the choreography for the 14 separate texts seemed like varia-tions on a sado-masochistic theme, as if the women were being put through ritualized tortures meant to mirror the agonies of the fallen city. The contrast between the subhmated brutality on the stage and the spare beauty of the music was as great as that between the music and the horrors recounted in the words. It is a disorienting but strangely evocative work, bathed in a theatrical atmosphere of ancient ritual.

Forsythe began choreographing when he was a dancer with the Stuttgart Ballet and since 1984 he has been the director of the Frankfurt Ballet. He has produced dances for several companies, works that are often dramatically hard-edged, full of tough energy, and with complex, high-speed choreography that stretches both dancers and the classical vocabulary to the snapping point.

His "Steptext" (an extract of a larger work done in Frankfurt), shown by the Lyon Opera Ballet on its New York visit last January, is a work for four dancers that juxtaposes seemingly informal, everyday movement and classical poise, put together with choreographic density and sudden shifts of mood and direction. "In the Middle, Somewhat Elevated" looks like more of the same, only more so, for nine dancers in various, constantly changing combinations. In a program note, Forsythe says that he chose the dancers according to their various qualities, to explore movement with certain basic elements as a point of departure, and that each, rehearsal was filmed, the end result being put together in the manner of an edited film. With dancers like Sylvie Guillem, Isabelle Guerin, Karin Averty, Fanny Gaïda, Laurent Hilaire and Manuel Legris - in short, the front rank of the company's youngest soloists - Forsythe had rich and malleable material, and he produced a essay in breakneck choreographic invention. The stage was divided only by light and darkness, with the dancers occasionally retiring to the shadow to take a breather — like athletes going to the bench only to be thrown back into the fray a moment later. Tom Willems's original score was an apt musical platform of electronically manipulated sound.

Post-Balanchine is a term that has been applied to Forsythe, and it does not seem out of place. In any case, he is one of a number of choreographers engaged to do new works for the New York City Ballet's festival of American composers next year.

Armitage's "Les Anges Ternis" was a very French affair, in the decorative sense, with costumes by Christian Lacroix that included stiff little tutus and a lot of strident color, and a series of still lifes by David Salle as backdrops. But the classical-jazzy choreography more than survived the competition, especially in clever pas de deux for Elisabeth Platel and Jean Guizerix and a couple of jumping-jack solos for Jean-Marie Didi'ere, all set to Charlie Mingus's "Black Saint and the Sinner Lady."

"Soon," by Daniel Ezralow of the Momix Dance Theater, was an exhilarating pas de deux for Françoise Legree and Patrick Du-pond, to music by U2, and "The Envelope," by David Parsons, was a jokey Mack Sennett chase set to bleeding bits of Rossini overtures involving comically sinister characters trying to get rid of an unwanted letter.

Oddly enough, the only item on the allAmerican program that did not work very well were the solos extracted from Alwin Nikolais's "Schema," the full-length work he did for the Paris Opera in 1980. The context was missing, but the main problem was that movements written for Murray Louis, with his highly articulated and minutely controlled limbs, are not easily absorbed by even the best classically trained dancers.

On-the-spot reports of an era of great inventions and remarkable people

LHT journalist Hebe Dorsey, fascinated by the Belle Epoque, has compiled a book that is a veritable open window on that extravagant period. Using the most authentic of sources - the archives of the Paris Herald (former nickname of the International Herald Tribune) -she has sifted through literally thousands of pages of newsprint to bring readers an immense variety of information as well as reproductions of major news stories of the time, articles, gossip columns, sports pages, turn-ofthe-century fashion news (for men and women)... even old-time comic strips and cartoons.

In day-to-day editions, the Paris Herald chronicled the decline of the old, existing order and caught the Belle Epoque spirit of emerging modern life. It's history as you like it ... with flair, fun and style. Order this beautiful book today . . . to keep or give,

EC Starts Drive to Insure Domestic Market for Telecommunications

Rewers BRUSSELS - The European Community Commission began a major new drive Thursday to ensure a true community market for telecommunications and drive off competition from the United States and Japan. In a report, the EC commission proposed a wide range of moves to deregulate Europe's telecommunications and to end the fragmentation of the 12-nation bloc's markets. It includes proposals to ensure telecommunications equipment can be sold freely throughout the bloc, to deregulate satellite communications partially and to create a body to draw up common EC standards. The EC industry commissioner. Karl-Heinz Narjes, said that the world telecommunications market was already valued at more than 500 billion European Currency Units ($580 billion), and growth in demand for services and information was explosive.

The United States and Japan already hold just under half the world market and have made major efforts to boost performance.

Procter & Gamble Says It Will Restructure The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Procter & Gamble Co.

announced Thursday an $800 million restruc-turing of its manufacturing operations to con-solidate its plants in the United States and A pretax charge of about $800 million will be taken against fourth-quarter earnings to cover costs of the restructuring, the consumer prod-ucts company said.

After considering the estimated tax benefits. the charge will reduce net income in the 1986-87 fiscal year by about $435 million, the company

The primary focus of the restructuring was consolidation of manufacturing operations with Procter & Gamble plants becoming more concentrated on single products or families of products. For example, the number of U.S. sites producing granules for laundry products has been reduced from 12 to nine, and the number of sites producing shortening and oil is being reduced from seven to three. As a result, some plant equipment and buildings will no longer be needed and will be available for disposal or converted to other uses, the company said.

The company said it expected to close relatively few plants out of a total of 120 worldwide.

Subaru of America in Skid Because of the Yen's Rise

By VARTANIG G. VARTAN

New York Times Service EW YORK - Subaru of America Inc., a former highflying stock, has lost friends in the Wall Street community for the simple reason that its earnings - and share price — have plummeted during the past year. The company, which imports and distributes Japanese made vehicles for sale in the United States, has been a victim of the yen's appreciation against the dollar.

"We're probably the only firm still carrying Subaru on the buy list," said Stanley Lanzet, a special situations analyst at Drexel

Ronald A. Glantz, automotive analyst for Montgomery Securities in San Francisco, rates Subaru's stock as a "sell." Harvey considers it "below average" in appeal over the next year. Both analysts recently lowered their earnings estimates. And the Value Line Investment Survey accords Subaru's stock its lowest "timeliness" rating.

high of $39 in mid-1986, shortly after an eight-for-one stock split took effect. Last week, the stock changed hands at $12.50. This followed an announcement by Subaru that profit for its quarter ended April 30 had plunged to 21 cents a share, from 47 cents a

On Thursday, the Subaru shares fell 25 cents to close at $13 in over-the-counter trading.

Seen as the main cause of Subaru's earnings decline was the prolonged rise in the value of the yen against the dollar, which caused the cost of imported cars to increase. "As a result, the company was forced to offer incentives that, in effect, wiped out its average markup of $500 to $550 on a car," said Donald F. De Scenza of Nomura Securities International. "This meant that most of Subaru's profits for the latest period came from investment income, financing activity and its parts business.

"I carry a neutral rating on the stock," he added. "In retro-spect, it should have been a sell. I had the stock as a buy until last July, when I lowered it to neutral. At that time, the shares were selling at $32 or $33 on their way down."

R. LANZET of Drexel Burnham echoed these views.
"Higher importing costs for Subaru coincided with a giut of cars in this country, thereby intensifying pressures on the company," he said. Mr. Lanzet views the stock with particular fondness, having first recommended it to clients in 1979 at a split-adjusted price of 62.5 cents a share. It has remained on Drexel Burnham's buy list ever since.

The initial attraction of Subaru, he said, was that "investors had a chance to buy into a franchise -- a company that imported and sold a fuel-efficient, low-maintenance car that tied in with the economy-minded spirit of the times." In later years, he added, management's strategy was to upgrade its product mix to higher-priced cars, a move that kept profits moving ahead despite an

Earnings reached a record $1.92 a share for the year ended Oct. 31, after rising steadily from 9 cents a share in the 1977 fiscal year. But Mr. Glantz of Montgomery Securities projects profit at $1.05 a share for the current fiscal year and at 80 cents the next year. Mr. Heinbach of Merrill Lynch carries comparable estimates of $1.15 and $1 a share 32 a share in the 1987 fiscal year. For the next year, he expects $2 a share in the 1987 fiscal year. For the next year, he expects $2 a share and bases this estimate on his belief that the company "will change its product mix to a more economical, back-to-basics approach and attract burear to the showrooms." attract buyers to the showrooms."

"Subaru is a big cash generator, since it has no capital needs," Mr. Lanzet said. "By the end of this fiscal year, it will have close to $7 a share in cash and, a year down the road, it should have about $9 a share in cash."

Olson: A No-Nonsense Man for Detail

New Chairman Showed Competitive Streak at Hertz

By Barnaby J. Feder
New York Times Service
NEW YORK — Frank A. Olson's promotion to chairman and chief executive of Allegis Corp. makes sense to people familiar with his long career with Hertz the car rental company that Allegis owns.

"He is immensely competi-tive," said O.J. Simpson, the for-mer football star who has been Hertz's chief advertising spokesman since 1974. "I've had to negotiate directly with him and, in my case, he never loses. In his office, he's strictly no-nonsense." In turning to a fellow board member after Richard J. Ferris's sudden resignation Tuesday, the main concern of Allegis's direc-tors may have been choosing an executive thoroughly familiar with the company's problems. But Mr. Olson, 54, also has a reputation for management skills that could help Allegs in a period of upheaval.

"He has a tremendous attention to detail, and his persistence is legendary," said Vincent A. Wasik, chief executive officer of National Car Rental Co. and a former Hertz executive vice presi-

For all his executive talents, Mr. Olson has not been able to shield Hertz from some trying moments. Hertz's share of the car rental market has fallen from 60 percent in the 1960s to about 35

Profits often have slumped partly because of the industry's frequent discounting and give-

Hertz also has frequently been bogged down in executive in-lighting, which reached its public peak in 1980 when Mr. Olson had a failing-out with Joseph V. Vittoria, then Hertz's president and chief executive officer.

Allegis might find him wellequipped to deal with the unions, a former colleague said.

Mr. Vittoria was shunted aside to a vice chairmanship and in 1982 was exiled to Europe. Shortly afterward, he moved to Hertz's bitter rival, Avis Inc., taking with him 15 Hertz executives and some documents that Hertz said were confidential.

Mr. Oison showed his combative streak by pressing a suit to recover the documents and prevent Mr. Vittoria from working Mr. Wasik of National Car. who was asked by Mr. Olsen to leave Hertz in 1980 after disagreements on strategy and operations, said Allegis might find Mr. Olson well-equipped to deal with its unions.

Allegis's new chairman and chief executive grew up in San Francisco and started working in the car rental business at the age of 18 as a night manager at the airport there. After graduation from City College of San Francis-co, Mr. Olson founded a car rental business that was purchased by Hertz in 1964.

After a brief stint in Washington D.C., Mr. Olson became responsible for Hertz operations in Arizona and California.

By 1970 he had been named general manager of all of Hertz's car rental operations in the United States. Mr. Olson joined the Hertz board in 1974, and was named chief executive in 1977 and chairman in 1980. He also was executive vice president of RCA Corp., which was the parent of Hertz before Hertz was sold in 1985 to UAL Inc., as Allegis was formerly known.

One of Mr. Olson's first recommendations Tuesday was that the six-week-old name Allegis be scrapped. He will ask shareholders to approve the name United Airlines Inc., which the company renamed UAL Inc. in 1969.

Run-Up in Stock And Pilots' Offer Clinched Sell-Off

Corp.'s announcement that it will break up the company and sell the pieces could bring investors almost $3 billion in profits, in-vastraent bankers say.

Allegis owns United Airlines. ine Hertz car rental company and we hotel chains. Hilton Internaional and Westin.

The pilots' union and Coniston Partners, Allegis's biggest antag-mists, hailed the planned sales. Coniston, a Wall Street money management firm that stands to profit hugely from its 13.2 percent holding in Allegis, said it would monitor developments, and the pilots responded in simifarly muted tones as they considared the dimensions of their vic-tory. They called the development "a first step in the right direction."

But there seemed no doubt that Allegis would be broken up, with the sale of the airline to company employees, or possibly to a higher bioder. The prospect of a higher bidder, however, seemed remote because no other airline was thought to be interested in an airline as huge as United.

Offers to buy other pieces of the company are already coming in. insiders said. Wall Street houses, along with advisers, trad-ers and individual investors, will share heavily in the proceeds.

Coniston, for example, which used a $520 million investment in the company to help precipitate the breakup plan, could make $250 million.

Based on the individual value of the pieces, investment bankers said that stockholders eventually might get as much as $100 a share, double the market value of the company only two months ago. Based on Allegis's 58 million shares outstanding, this would put a market value on the company of $5.8 billion.

Investment bankers putting the deals together could earn at least $100 million in fees. Arbitragers, See ALLEGIS, Page 15

Bonn GNP Falls By 0.5% in 2d Weak Showing

By Ferdinand Protzman

FRANKFURT - The West German economy contracted by 0.5 percent in the first three months of 1987, the Federal Statistics Office reported Thursday, m its second consecutive weak quarterly performance.

showed that gross national product rose 2.4 percent in the first quarter from its level a year earlier. The figures are subject to revision and are adjusted to account for inflation and seasonal factors.

The preliminary figures also Unadjusted, first-quarter GNP would have declined 1 percent from the final quarter of 1986, the statistics office said. GNP measures a nation's total output of goods and services.

The government attributed the poor showing to unusually severe winter weather, particularly in March, that brought the construction industry to almost a standstill and to a drop in motor vehicle registrations in the first two months of the year.

It also attributed the decline from the fourth quarter to booming car sales at the end of 1986, when consumers bought quickly to take advantage of tax breaks.

In the fourth quarter, GNP was unchanged from the third quarter, although it rose 2.4 percent from a year earlier. For 1986 as a whole, West Germany's GNP rose 2.4 percent, after a rise of 2.5 percent in Private economists put much of the blame for the economic slowdown of the past six months to the Deutsche mark's strength against the dollar and other major currencies. The mark's ascent has cut sharply into exports, especially capital goods from West Germany's huge heavy industrial sector.

Exports of goods and services rose 0.4 percent in the first quarter from a year earlier, compared with a year-to-year decline of 0.9 percent in the fourth quarter of 1986. Imports in the first quarter rose 5.9 percent from a year earlier period, compared with a 4.3 percent annual gain in the fourth quarter.

But the officials, including Karl Otto Pöhl, president of the Bundesbank, said that growth picked up significantly in April. They are forecasting second-quarter GNP growth of 1 to 1.5 percent.

The government is sticking with its official prediction of 2.5 percent GNP growth for 1987, although some Bonn officials are now calling that expectation too optimistic.

While the drop in first-quarter GNP was in line with the expectations of economists, they differed widely on the report's implications for the full year.

"The figures are not really anything to get excited about," said Ute Geipel, chief economist for Citibank AG in Frankfurt, "The year-on-year comparison is not "The economy started very slowly in 1986," he said, "then picked up quite strongly in the second and third quarters. We see the same thing happening this year and are sticking with our forecast of 1 percent GNP growth in 1987." Gert Schmidt, an economist for Industrickreditbank AG in Düsseldorf, had a more pessimistic forecast for 1987. He said he saw little chance of a strong economic recovery in the rest of 1987 because of problems in the export sector.

"The absolute best we can hope for is that export volume remains at the 1986 level," he said, "The mark's strength against the dollar is the main problem. It directly hurts the 16 percent of our exports that go to the U.S.

"But the indirect effect, the dramatic heightening of export com-petitiveness from other countries who sell goods in dollars, is possi-See BONN, Page 17

Philippines Drops Demand For New Terms on Debt

NEW YORK - Finance Minister Jaime Ongoin of the Philippines

said Thursday that he had dropped his demand for improved terms in a March accord on rescheduling $10.3 billion in debt to foreign banks. He also said that foreigners investing in the Philippines by converting debt into equity would be required to fund part of that investment. with Philippine Investment Notes, or PINs, which are non-interest bearing debt certificates with a six-year maturity.

The nation's 12-bank advisory committee agreed March 27 to reschedule the debt over 17 years at a rate of 7/8 of a percentage point over the London interbank offered rate. Soon afterward, a committee led by Citibank agreed to restructure Argentina's debts at a finer margin, of 13/16 point over Libor.

Mr. Ongoin said he had been told by bankers that the 13/16 rate was granted to Mexico last year for special reasons and would not be matched for any other debtor. But after a review of the Argentine package, the Philippines decided to drop its protest, he said.

He said he hoped that banks would make up for the difference between the debt packages through a substantial purchase of PINs. thereby reducing the amount of hard currency that Manila must spend to service its $28.2 billion foreign debt. The option for creditor banks to buy PINs was covered in the March debt accord.

At Summit's End, 7 Agreed to Disagree on Growth Policy

By Hobart Rowen Washington Post Service VENICE — The leaders of the seven major Western industrialized nations ended their summit meeting by admitting that despite slipping economic growth rates and serious trade problems, they were unable to agree that growth-oriented policies should be pursued now. Instead in a long communique ending the 13th annual summit meeting, the leaders postponed any stimulative actions unless "world economic growth is insufficient." The communique on economic ssues was so generally worded that it underlined the inability of the leaders to reach substantive agree-nent on some key policies. Nonetheless, James A. Baker 3d, the U.S. Treasury secretary, insisted that "clear progress has been made on a number of fronts."

But when asked how he thought financial markets would assess the meeting, Mr. Baker would say only that "maybe the reaction will be all right" if the markets remember that no new major initiatives had been promised.

The leaders reaffirmed the need for stability in the exchange value of the dollar and other currencies. They also promised to intensify coordination of economic policy

Gore Vidal and History are on breezy firstname terms, but there is a trickle of irritation. underneath. As mentor, Vidal has reservations ahout his protégé In his fictional re-creations of the United

States's political life — "Burr." "Lincoln."
"1876." "Washington D.C." — Vidal firstnamed his way from the Revolution and the Jackson era, to the Civil War, to the robber-baron Gilded Age, to a stretch running from the later New Deal into the McCarthy days. In "Empire," just published, he goes back for a missing chunk: the expansionist years of the Spanish American War and Manifest Destiny. We had met Washington, Jefferson, Benedict Arnold, Colonel Blennerhasset - footnotes as well as Big Feet - Lincoln, Seward, Stanton, John Hay, William Cullen Bryant in their historical pajamas. Now we are treated to the table talk and table manners of Teddy Roosevelt, William McKinley, William Randolph Hearst and the two Henrys: Adams and James; along with Vidal's Alexandrian notions of what they all represented. The sinking of the Titanic after a collision with an iceberg on its first voyage from Southampton, England, to New York in April 1912 has become a story that has been incorporated into Western folklore, a tragedy with the elements of grand opera and the inevitability of doom that emerges only in the recounting.

To add to the dimension of the catastrophe

the formidable death list - 1,522 of 2,227 aboard - included the elite of trans-Atlantic society. John Jacob Astor, Mr. and Mrs. Isidor Strans, of the Macy's family, and Colonel Ar-chibald Butt, President Taft's close friend, who shortly before the Titanic slipped beneath the waves around 2:30 A.M. on that April 15, joined three other gentlemen for a last round of cards at their usual table in the first-class smoking room. It is small wonder that the Titanic has been the subject of fiction, film, opera and factual exploration. In this new volume, John P. Eaton and Charles A. Haas have assembled, in equal parts, illustration and written text that narrate with the life of the Titanic from concept to the aftermath of memorials, litigation and the most recent discovery of the wreck itself. It is a meticulously detailed, cleanly written account by two who are figures in the Titanic Historical Society, an organization whose members are dedicated to all aspects of the ship and events (Richard F. Shepard, NYT) related to it.

"My growing collection of utterly pure nearly sacrosanct folk songs was not some, nearly sacrosance look sough was not some; thing to be paid only partial attention to, and neither, apparently, was I," Joan Bazz admiris engagingly, in this memoir. "As my repertoire expanded, my rigidity stayed the same. Each song was as desperately serious at the last."

In a year when the market is glutted with synthetic, self-serving, ghostwritten autobiographies, Joan Baez has — not surprisingly actually sat down, written her own book and tried hard to be honest about her life. The result is very much in keeping with the selfconscious amateurism that informed the folk music movement of the 1960s, and that is a

Sarah Sheard evidently knows her contemsarah sheard evidently knows her contemporary Japan and captures this scene in her stender novel, "Almost Japanese": "On the street I've been passing teen-agers wearing T-shirts chastely printed with English phrases like: Just good Just now. Freckle." Or 'Always being high spirits. Anytime keep lively."

It can only have to do with Japanese youth having a crush on anything they think is American teen-ager —rock, T-shirts and jeans, teenage argor. Inevitably, in their way of expressing this passion, a few things do get lost in the translation.

Sheard's novella is about a Canadian teenager's crush on all things Japanese. She relates her skeletal, elemental story in language of the haiku. It's in English, but it feels as though it's m Japanese. "Almost full moon. I've been mute for days now," Emma notes about her feelings of both alienation and joy while traveling in the land of her obsession. In the Garden, Flashy Lakers Show Courage, Too

By George Vecsey New York Times Service

BOSTON - They hide the celebrities in the Boston Garden, stick them in upper boxes, high above the screaming mob. Up there, the bald guy, that's Marvelous Marvin Hagler. Over there, making vagueiy mocking gestures, is Jack Nicholson.

But downstairs belongs to the fans, unglamorous in their green outlits, who shout things like, "Got a headache?" to Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and, "You choke," to the referees and loss worse.

Then there is that cranky old gent. Red Auerbach, who somehow blustered his way to the officials' door after Tuesday night's game and delivered a vicious little diatribe about how they had no courage, presumably because they detected Kareem's missed foul shot bouncing off Kevin McHale or Robert Parish with eight seconds left. The Boston Globe heard Earl Strom replying to the Celtics president. "Red, you showed me the class I always thought you had."

The Los Angeles Lakers have a few things to prove. They would just as soon not go back to the Forum to wrap up the championship in that glittering ambiance. A five-game championship would be just that much more convincing than a six- or seven-game championship.

"This was a big game, a very big game," said Pat Riley, the Lakers' coach, after the gallant 107-106 victory Tuesday night. "I don't want to say we can win one of three. cause I want to do it in one."

Because of his sensitive words and elegant suits, some people think Riley is more of a Left Coast pretty boy than a basketball coach out of Schenectady, New York, He resents even more the stereotype of his

Yes, the Lakers do wear those purpleand-gold uniforms and they do clap their hands in unison during the pre-game introductions and there will always be that Laker Girl image. Riley has said that because his players are mostly black, and play with a certain amount of flash, their triumphs will be chalked up to natural rhythm and all that jazz

The Lakers were in position to finish the series Thursday night, not just because of spring in their legs but because of their courage and intelligence after falling 16 points behind in Boston Garden.

They still had that wonderful cushion, the extra home game, the reward for the best record in the league during the regular season. They could return to the Forum for a sixth and seventh game if absolutely necessary, but the most valuable player in the league did not want it that way.

"We just want to win on Thursday," said Earvin Johnson, who could be no more gritty if his nickname were Sluggo or Muges instead of Magic. When the Lakers fell behind early, Johnson recalled, "I said, 'It's about time.' I didn't want the game to get away from us, so I took over."

That statement was said simply, with no trace of arrogance. Johnson saw that Abdul-Jabbar's shots were not falling that James Worthy was not in the flow in the first half, and that Byron Scott was into his occasional June disappearance. So Johnson, who has often distributed spectacular passes to keep the peace among his team-

Two of Magic's plays won the game in the final 29 seconds.

After the Celties threw the ball away, the Lakers went into a huddle in which Riley, outlined a play for Johnson and Kareem. For the play to work, things would have to go right near the basket. Robert Parish, the Celtic center, would have to insert his body in the middle, to cut off a direct pass to Kareem. And Michael Cooper would have to flit into the three-second lane.

"If Parish takes a hitch up, that gives me room," Kareem said. "Then Cooper sets a pick on Parish, to get Parish's attention. I just watch Magic.

There was no eye contact, no verbal signal, just a sudden flash of the ball over a thicket of hands and arms, and Kareem had a dunk shot, and the Lakers had a lead.

Then, after Larry Bird's 3-point basket and Kareem's one foul shot and the out-ofbounds call that Red did not like, the Lakers gave the ball to Johnson, again.

from the left side and did it himself, his "junior, junior, junior sky hook," a tippytoes driving right-handed hook that he practices every day, following consultation with its inventor, Abdul-Jabbar himself. "Legend has it that we can't win here," Kareem said, "The Celuics don't have any quit in them, but we've done it before here,

The Lesser Lights Blazed for a Time at Rugby's World Cup

With Gallant Fijians, Fighting Americans and Others Gone, Semifinalists Get Down to Business

SYDNEY - The first two weeks of rugby's inaugural World Cup, which reaches the semifinal round this weekend, was meant to be a time when the lesser rugby-playing countries had their moments on the stage, before they were sent on their way with a pat on the head from the established giants of the game. But before the end of that formight those giants had stopped whatever they were doing and stared in wonder at the competition flaming into color.

For example, there was Fiji. New Zealand versus Wales is a classic match - two countries in which rugby is the leading pastime, two countries having a sporting an-tipathy towards each other merely because the countries and the peoples are so alike. However, Wales has staggered through on courage and on the dazzling talents of Jonathan Davies, the brilliant flyhalf. New Zealand is formidable, with less flair than Wales, but with an unstoppable passion and pattern. When the thunder has died it could

Youthful Ambitions

By Russell Baker

N EW YORK — Once upon a time, or in 1942 if you prefer. high schools graduated their sweaty produce in June. Now the car-crash roundups in the press suggest they favor May, and why not? It's a whole new world out there at Hudson High and codles more fun, I gather, than it was when Jack Armstrong and I were reading Ovid when the Latin teacher was looking and Spicy Detective when he wasn't Mention vice and we would have thought of the senior prom. Had we been asked to stand before all America on the Donahue Show and discuss teen-age pregnancy, both Jack and I would have died of incredulity or stage fright.

The senior prom was awful enough. For one thing, I couldn't dance. This meant I would have to find a girl who didn't mind dancing with a person who couldn't dance.

Another difficulty: I had no car. Since the California way of life had not yet been invented, the highschool student's natural right to ride to school in his own car did not exist. Many students, though, could cadge a loan of the parents' car for glorious occasions. Here again I was at a disadvantage, since my mother had no car. There was a kind uncle who might lend me his car if I could drive, which I

I had intended to learn to drive so I could try to borrow his car for the senior prom, but had been too busy to get around to it. This meant I would have to find a girl willing not only to go to the dance with a nondancer, but also to go on the trolley car.

Believe it or not, I agonized over this situation for months of fretful nights before good sense came to the rescue and I said, "To beck with the senior prom.

At that time heck was still good enough for high-school boys, though we were capable of stronger talk when showing off.

For the commencement I rented a bandleader tuxedo (white jacket). sat in a steamy auditorium with several hundred other wilting youths and sweated buckets while the mayor of Baltimore talked incomprehensibly for hours.

It was a segregated world we inhabited. My high school was for white males only. The yearbook editors insisted that everybody have an "ambition," and almost all 542 graduates they photographed confessed without jokey self-consciousness that they did indeed have "ambitions." "To study medicine" and "to study law" were popular. So was "to be an accountant." Alvin Udoff wanted "to be an actor." Bud Crawford, "to study radio," and Jake Abramowitz, "to be an announcer."

Reading these confessions is a bit joling 45 years later, for it suggests a powerful determination to make a serious run at life in a way that is fashionable to mock in young people today. "To enter business" - dozens of them say that. Others are more idiosyncratic. "To be a commercial pilot "To play pro baseball "To be a machinist." Paul Shapiro wanted "to be an author." Earl Morey wanted "to study theology." To enter the diplomatic corps." said Charles Sussman. "To be an orchestra drummer," said Murray Heine. "A violinist," said Julius Scheir. "To be a rabbi," said Eugene Rosenberg. "A teacher," said Charles McIntyre. "An aviator." said Gordon Ward.

"Аетопацись." "physics," "surgery, "bacteriology," "an entomologist." "a print-"a toolmaker."

These kids were not fooling around. Here's Rowan LeCompte: ambitious to become "a designer of stained glass." His stained-glass windows today are part of the glory of the National Cathedral in Washington. These kids were determined on success while they were still kids and not ashamed to say so. A hundred list as their "ambition" simply "to be a success."

A great many went to the war in the next year or two and lost the power to say heck with pleasing hoyish innocence. Many doubtless became successes and learned in the 1960s to tolerate and even love children who told them success was a shabby and contemptible goal.

I was above such squalor. True. for "ambition" I put down "to be a spaper columnist," but as usual I was just fooling around. New York Times Service

Nor is that all: Styne is planning revivals of "Funny Girl" in New York and London next season ("I'm responsible to both companies for casting and every-thing, because I won't let them do it any other way." he said tartly), and he is scheduled for a stint at the Seattle Repertory Theater in December to stage "Treasure Is-Although "Bar Mitzvah Boy" is came to New York. "In London, it looked like the only reason the boy ran away was that he was ashamed he was a Jew," Styne explained, "The focus of the play is entirely different now. The true reason the boy ran away was because he didn't want to be a man. He didn't want to be like his grandfather and his father and his sister's boyfriend - not because they were Jewish, not because they liked gefilte fish, but because their behavior was wrong, their morals were wrong. All the things he learned through the Torah and the Ten Commandments were being violated in his own home, and he felt they were hypocritical." Styne has assumed an aggressive role in reshaping the show.

"When we started doing it here, I figured I better take over and protect my work. I had problems with the author to make him understand my wanting to write new songs. I was trying to motivate the plot. Jack Rosenthal is a very fine movie and television writer, but I don't think he's had much experience writing a play. In theater there's no camera close-up; you have to say it with words, and the words weren't there. So I tried to bring them out by the music. The story is clear now - maybe too clear. Also the entire show had to be thought out musically, because it's being done with two pianos

Styne went on to become a child prodigy who played the pi-

however, he had turned his atten-

Nor has Styne's visibility waned with the years; such contemporary artists as Linda Ron-stadt continue to record his songs, and Liza Minnelli sings no fewer than three Jule Styne numbers every night in her current engagement at Carnegie Hall.

By his own reckoning, Styne

Sitting in his living room on the Upper East Side, Styne is surrounded by artifacts attesting to his longevity, from the sheet mu-sic for his very first song, "Son-day" ("Novelty Fox Trot Song With Ukelele Accompaniment it reads), which was written in 1926, to Irving Berlin's portrait of Streisand in "Funny Girl" to such family mementos as the photographs of Styne's daughter adorning his grand plano.

Not that the composer has any intention of slowing down. "I'm working harder, thinking better, being able to listen to other people better — that comes from get-ting older. I never stop to think about my age. The whole name of the game is, you must have something to do every day, so you just can't wait till you do it. You've got to go to a place where you sit down and do some work. Your brain wants to work. It worked all your life for you. If you want to retire, you're old. If you keep your brain working, you're young."

He smiled happily. He seemed very young indeed.
